Dr. Ben Carson
Republican

Hello friends, I'm Dr. Ben Carson. You know how hunger is a big problem throughout the world. And even in the United States of America. There are so many who go to bed hungry every night. Is that really necessary, we should ask ourselves.

You know back in the old days of this country. When we had communities spread out across the nation, in some cases separated by hundreds of miles. No one ever starved. Do you know why? Because if something happened to the breadwinner. Everybody else pitched in. And they took care of that family.

And we must once again develop that same mentality. The duty to take care of the hungry. And those who are downtrodden in our society, rest with each of us.

And there are many who think that maybe the government should take care of everybody who's hungry. The government should take care of everybody who has any kind of a problem.

I think the government can facilitate things. And can help business, industry, and academia. Wall Street, churches, and community groups combine their efforts. And that synergize force can be powerful in eliminating all the woes of our nation today.

Also, a government can be very helpful in facilitating foreign aid. Right now, we give away billions of dollars in foreign aid, to help other countries. But I have a tremendous idea I think that would be a win/win situation.

Right now in Cameroon, Africa there are American companies who have gone over to help the people there cultivate a lot of crops. They have millions of acres of incredibly fertile land. And you know with the right cultivation techniques, they're getting record crops.

So our companies are making very handsome profits. But they're also building infrastructure of that country. They're also creating jobs there. They're also teaching people all the modern AG techniques. And do it becomes a win/win situation. We need to be thinking about that. And all the countries of the world where hunger exists. Where we can actually export some of our knowledge and technology in a win/win situation.

Where our companies win. And where those countries win. And where we cultivate friendship. Rather than animosity around the world. That is what a Carson administration would do.
